- 1 Maya watched the other children ride their bikes down the sunny sidewalk. Their wheels spun fast, and they laughed as the warm breeze blew through their hair. Maya wanted to ride too, but she felt scared. Her dad smiled and said, "I believe you can do this." He walked over and held the back of her red bike. "We can learn together," he said.
- 2 Maya climbed onto the seat. The ground looked far away. Her legs shook a little. "I don't think I can do it," she whispered. But her dad held the bike steady. "Just push the pedals," he said gently. Maya took a deep breath and pushed. The bike rolled forward! It was bumpy at first, but she kept going.
- 3 The next day, Maya fell off the bike. It didn't hurt much, but she felt sad. She sat on the grass and didn't want to try again. Her mom sat beside her and said, "Sometimes we fall down. That's okay. It means we're learning." Maya thought about what her mom said. She looked at the bike and remembered how far she had come. She stood up and brushed off her pants.
- 4 Maya climbed back onto the bike. This time, her dad only held it for a moment. She pedaled faster. Her heart beat hard. Then, all at once, her dad let go! Maya rode by herself for ten whole feet! She laughed so loud the whole neighborhood could hear. When she stopped, she jumped off and hugged her dad tight. "I did it!" she said. "I kept trying, and I did it!"
