- 1 Maya had always been quiet. She sat in the back row of her class and rarely raised her hand, even when she knew the answer. But when Ms. Chen asked for a student leader for the school's community garden project, something inside Maya whispered yes.
- 2 "Are you sure?" her best friend Jordan asked. "You're so shy." "I know," Maya said softly. "But I think I can do it."
- 3 On the first day, ten students showed up to help with the garden. Some were older than Maya. Some had done gardening before. Maya felt nervous standing in front of them all. Her hands shook a little as she held her clipboard. But instead of pretending to know everything, Maya did something brave. She asked questions.
- 4 "What does everyone think we should plant?" she asked the group. "I want to hear your ideas." A girl named Sophia raised her hand. "We could grow tomatoes. I've helped my grandma with hers." "That's great!" Maya said. "Will you help me figure out where to plant them?"
- 5 When Marcus said he didn't know anything about gardening, Maya didn't make him feel bad. "That's okay," she said. "We can learn together. You can help me mix the soil. I'll teach you what I know, and you can teach me what you learn."
- 6 Day by day, the students worked together. They dug, planted, and watered. When something didn't work—like the seeds that wouldn't sprout—Maya didn't blame anyone. She asked everyone for ideas to fix it. When someone had a good idea, Maya made sure they knew how much their help meant.

- 7 By the end of summer, the garden was full of vegetables. Tomatoes hung from tall plants. Lettuce grew in neat rows. Carrots poked their orange tops from the dark soil. But the best part wasn't the vegetables. It was how happy everyone felt when they walked to the garden.
- 8 One day, Mrs. Rodriguez from the office came to visit. She saw the beautiful plants and the smiling faces. "This is wonderful," she said. "Maya, you did an amazing job leading this team." Maya's cheeks turned pink. "I didn't do it alone," she said. "Everyone here helped. Sophia knew about tomatoes. Marcus mixed the soil so well. And Jordan made sure we all stayed organized. I just asked for help and listened."
- 9 Mrs. Rodriguez smiled. "That's exactly what a good leader does." As Maya walked through the garden with Mrs. Rodriguez, she realized something important. Being a leader didn't mean knowing everything or being the loudest person. It meant knowing your own limits, asking others what they could do, and helping everyone shine. The quiet girl had learned that the smallest voice could lead the biggest growth.

MAIN IDEA • what is the passage MOSTLY about?

A shy student learns that good leadership comes from listening to others and admitting when you need help, not from being the smartest or loudest person in the room.

DETAIL 1

Maya asked her team for ideas instead of pretending to know everything about gardening

DETAIL 2

Sophia shared her tomato-growing knowledge and Marcus learned to mix soil even though he had no gardening experience

DETAIL 3

When seeds didn't sprout, Maya asked everyone for ideas to fix the problem instead of blaming someone
