The Portable Weather Station

1 Early on Thursday, our group carried a portable weather station to the school garden. The kit had a thermometer, a rain gauge, a wind vane, a clipboard, and a small case to protect the instruments. Portable means able to be carried, so the root helped us understand the job before we even opened the box.

2 Caleb transported the rain gauge to the open grass. I supported the wind vane while Ava checked that it could turn freely. Then we wrote a short report about the conditions: cool air, steady breeze, no rain, and high clouds moving east.

3 The root port appeared in several useful words. Transport means carry across. Support means hold or carry from below. Report can mean carry information back to someone who needs it.

4 At the end, we returned the station to its shelf. The tools were small, but they helped us carry real weather information from the garden to the classroom.
