The Fox and the Crow

One of Aesop's Fables

One bright, sunny morning Fox trotted through the forest looking for his breakfast. His stomach grumbled as he darted under bushes and around trees, but he could not find anything to eat.

"I will surely go hungry today," Fox sighed. He lay down to mope about his bad luck.

After a while, Fox got up and kept walking through the forest. He looked under each bush. He looked around each tree. He still could not find anything to eat.

A flapping sound caught Fox's attention. He stopped and looked up. Crow sat on the lowest branch of a tree. Now, Fox had seen a lot of crows. It was nothing new. However, this crow had a large piece of cheese in her mouth.

"Ah-ha!" Fox thought. "There is something I can eat for breakfast."
